Plan of the course

Community Health

Academic year 2018/2019

---

doc. dr. sc. Vera Musil

I. COURSE AIMS

The course aims to encourage students to comprehend the importance of communities in the health of individuals and families. The course is based on the contemporary approach in medical education that the principle fields of action of a physician are human settlements and not laboratories and consulting rooms. Students are provided with an opportunity to perceive community members both inside and outside of the health care system, and to study epidemiological and socio-medical determinants of health alongside the activities of health and social care systems. Students work under the supervision of local health professionals (physicians and community nurses) in order to facilitate experience, knowledge, skills and attitudes transfer. Practical work comprises observing treatment of patients during all phases of their illnesses; from the initial contact with the health system, diagnostics, and therapy, home and workplace visits, to full recovery or rehabilitation. In addition, students learn the basic principles of health education, epidemiological and ecological diagnosis and public health field research.
